Parenting

Speech and Language Development

Money Worries

Parental Relationships

How does the Team Around The School work?

When you work with your child's school to discuss your family's needs they will complete a consent form with you.

This information is shared with a core group of professionals from early help, education, and health – plus professionals who are specialists in a specific area of work. They will then work together to identify the best package of support for you and your family.

The Team Around the School meetings are arranged by someone who knows you and your family, for example, School or Nursery and they will take place in those settings.

At these meetings, the school will make sure that your wishes and feelings are shared, are at the heart of the discussion and remain the priority. You will then work with someone from the team to develop a support plan, which is tailored to you and your families needs. At any stage if you feel that you no longer need this support a conversation will take place to understand your decision before services withdraw.

Schools and professionals will follow government guidance on information sharing when considering and explaining support available from the Team Around the School.
